Environmental Damage Assessment and Remediation Plan

05 – 07 December 2023

Interactive Sessions | Digital Learning | Assessments | 24/7 Experts Online/Offline Support

Introduction

Environmental Damage is occurring on a global scale. The pathway is a gravitational liquid flow, the harmful release being in the liquid phase and the receptor being an aquatic ecosystem. Many biomes are being damaged on a large scale by various factors. Global warming is pointed out as the main cause among many causes. Localized environmental destruction factors are also included. Massive environmental damage can cause negative feedback pathways in the ecosystem. In order to reduce the impact of environmental degradation related stakeholders and resource managers must be in position to deal with the long term effects and develop proper Environmental Remediation Plan.

Environmental remediation deals with the removal of pollution or contaminants from environmental media such as soil, groundwater, sediment, or surface water. Remedial action is generally subject to an array of regulatory requirements, and may also be based on assessments of human health and ecological risks where no legislative standards exist, or where standards are advisory.

To establish this its need of the hour to assess the environment damage and develop a proper mitigation plan.
